

The component architecture follows a layered design approach. Controllers manage user requests, services implement business logic, repositories encapsulate data access, and the workflow service acts as the core process execution engine. This separation improves maintainability, modifiability, and scalability while supporting future integration with Low-Code workflow configuration mechanisms.

